Charity Art Auction to raise funds for Aitutaki and Wastebusters waste reduction project

Real recycling by hand at Wastebusters

The Spatial Plan for Aitutaki adopted 2020

The Cook Islands is dedicated to championing sustainability, yet Aitutaki, one of its most pristine islands, faces a serious waste management issue. This fragile paradise currently depends on a large, makeshift landfill to handle its waste. Recognising the urgency of this problem, the internationally award-winning 2020 Spatial Plan, created by NZ based urban design firm Reset, highlights waste management as a top priority (<https://reseturban.co.nz/projects/aitutaki-plan-cook-islands/>).

Wānaka and Aitutaki share the growing challenges of waste management in communities that welcome significant numbers of tourists each year. Recognising Wānaka Wastebusters as a trusted source of expertise in circular economy practices both locally and nationally, Reset's co director Garth Falconer approached them with a view to connecting the Wānaka and Aitutaki communities as part of Reset's practise of community support.

In December, Sophie Ward, Wastebusters' Business Development Manager, will visit Aitutaki for one week hosted by Mayor of Aitutaki, Nick Henry. The visit aims for Wastebusters to share their expertise in waste reduction, community engagement, and social enterprise, inspiring the Aitutaki community to take positive environmental action and develop a similar programme focused on reuse, recycling, and zero waste education. Sophie will present to the Island Council, schools and community groups, assess the existing situation and complete a recommendations report for the Island Council.

With no public funding available for this project, Garth who is also an established artist is raising the necessary funds to realise this vision by offering 12 of his paintings for sale, with all proceeds dedicated to funding this initiative. The proceeds from the charity art sale will go directly to connecting these two communities.
